Although Murray Hennessy, old time gangeter, is at the point of death in Polyclinic Hospital to-day, he scorned even the pleadings of his wife that he "equeal" on the man who shot him twice at 12.30 o'clock this morning after a woman had lured him out of a back room of Arthur Popper's saloon, No. 751 Seventh avenue. In an east side dance hall gun fight thirteen years that trouble had been a forgotten in-The Kind You Have Always Bought cident in his life.

From that number two suspects were held on suspicio of being the assamins. Detectives also began searching for "Skootch" Thomas, who ence owned a saloon at Thirty-eighth street and Seventh avenue. Two years ago the partner of Thomas was murdered. Hennessy was the bartender in the place. Lieutenant-Detective Michael Re-

"If you didn't hold your coat out to screen a gun and then shoot through the cloth, somebody else dil, said Regan. "How about it?"

Lawrence grinned defiantly. "You're some Sherlock Holmes ain't you?" he replied. "Well, I'm not going to talk. I can't open my mouth till I see my mouthpleos my lawyer." He and Gordon were taken to the West Side Court and held without ball on the charge of felonious assault.

Hennessy arose and walked outside with her. A long hallway leads from the rear room to the sidewalk.

Persons in the place saw them go into the hallway. From there they went to the street and then the shooting followed.

One theory advanced was that the person who fired stood in the bell-way leading to the rear room. It could not be confirmed.

The years ago Hennessy was a shining light among East Side gangsters. He was known as a "badman." An Italian by birth, he boasted that he had taken the name of Hennessy "because he liked it." The old Five Points gang members knew and feared him. So did those who held membership in the Chatham Club.

On the evening of May $, 1901, Hennessy entered a dance hall known as May's Landing, in Catherine street. In the place was Meyer Moore, a member of the "Yake Yake Brady" gang. Moore had been gunning for Hennessy. They met on the dance floor, there was a double "gun play" and Moore fell, mortally wounded. His pals left him in front of a drug store, where he died. Hennessy was tried four months later and acquitted on the ground of self defense.

Clargymen interested themselves in him at the trial and when he had been acquitted he amounced that he had "turned white." As far as the police know, he lived up to his resolution. A few years ago he was married and he and his wife had been living at No. 32 Division street.
